In archaeology, geophysical survey is ground-based physical sensing techniques used for archaeological imaging or mapping. Remote sensing and marine surveys are also used in archaeology, but are generally considered separate disciplines. Other terms, such as "geophysical prospecting" and "archaeological geophysics" are generally synonymous.

Geophysical survey is the systematic collection of geophysical data for spatial studies. Detection and analysis of the geophysical signals forms the core of Geophysical signal processing. The magnetic and gravitational fields emanating from the Earth's interior hold essential information concerning seismic activities and the internal structure.

Introduction. Vertical flowmeter logging measures vertical movement of fluid in a borehole. Flowmeter data can provide critical information for the design and interpretation of hydraulic testing and chemical sampling in groundwater investigations, helping to refine site conceptual models.
