Patterns of reciprocity. One-to-one reciprocity. Some reciprocal relationships are direct one-to-one arrangements between individuals, or between institutions, or between governments. Some of these are one-time arrangements, and others are embedded in long-term relationships. Families often have expectations that children will reciprocate for the care they receive as infants by caring for their ...

As noted in Table 4, the Structural Null model that assigns items to factors but leaves the factors uncorrelated has a poor fit, although it is a significant improvement over the Independence model that lacks factor assignment. The Foundation model included two established paths among the burnout subscales: exhaustion to cynicism and cynicism to efficacy.
